ZEEBRUGGE HERO

LOST AN ARM IN RAID

Movies Illustrate Jutland Battle and American Destroyers' Work.

New York is soon to see the most popular exhibition of war pictures that Great Britain has yet shown the public. It is of naval activities, done in a new photographic color process, and takes in very kind of action in the English Channel the North Sea and on the high

There are pictures of the Jutland battle of the Zeebrugge and Ostend expeditions and of American destroyers on duty. The unnamed heroes of the merchant marine also here receive their first great tribute.

The exhibition was shown in London for three weeks and more than 500,000 persons viewed it, a record for photographic views of the war. To lecture or the pictures and explain them two British naval officers-Lieut. H. T. C. Walker, who lost an arm on the Vindictive in the Zeebrugge raid, and Lieut. J. C. Percy, who has been on recruiting work in Ireland-have been sent here The pictures will be shown next Monday in the Anderson Galleries.

Shell Bit Went Through Neck.

Lieut. Walker is a stocky, fair haired young Britisher. 27 years old, who was with the Grand Fleet from the outbreak of the war until he was put out of action last winter. A shiny hook takes the place of his left hand and on his neck and head are scars where bits of the same shell struck. One place went through his neck from side to aide, just missing the windpipe.

He was mentioned in despatches for his part in that affair, for aithough it
